HAEMORRHAGICHE DIATHESEN. Edited by Rudolf Jürgens and Erwin Deutsch. Springer-Verlag, Vienna, 1955. pp. 201. $9.30 (In German)

In this report of a symposium, there are some excellent articles; including that of P. Miescher (Basel) on immunothrombocytopenias, Braunsteiner and Pakesch on electron microscopic studies in the thrombopathies, E. Deutsch on the pathophysiology of certain “coagulopathies”, F. Koller on the clinical status and therapy of certain hemorrhagic diathesis, and Winterstein on the biochemistry of the clotting factors. This is a well-integrated collection of articles with records of the informal discussions that took place.—W.D.

This is an excellent and comprehensive treatise on the pharmacology of the various types of anticoagulants, and their various usages in clinical medicine. The laboratory aspects are well covered.—W.D.

This is an excellent and fairly comprehensive work on general immunology. There is very little space devoted to immunohematology.—W.D.

This is an outstanding monograph containing some remarkable photomicrographs of living blood cells made with phase microscopic and fluorescence microscopic techniques.
